Believe descendant of Gerret Cornelise Van Duyn of Zwolle in province of Overysell in Holland. Came to New Amsterdam from Newkirk in Zealand. Married Jacomia Swarts, daughter of Jacob Swarts of New Amsterdam. Nine children, several settling in N.J.
Hannah Warner	Believe a daughter of Peter Warner Sr. listed as a taxpayer in Loudoun Co. Va. along with Peter Jr, Leonard and William. Peter Sr. also listed in 1790 census in Frederick Co., Md.

In 1669 one Francois-Antoine Bourget from Hochburgund, now called "Haute Bourgoigne", together with his nine children in ages from ten to thirty-four, emigrated to Alsace-Lorraine because of his Protestant religion during the time of the persecution of the Huguenots. Four of these children were already married and had children of their own. Their names can no longer be determined today since the married children of Francois-Antoine Bourget shortly afterwards separated from their father, some going to the Pfalz and others to Holland in order to find a place to live and work. This original ancestor, Francois-Antoine Bourget, was a so-called Major Domus and was in charge of a castle belonging to a French prince. He was a member of the lower French nobility. He called himself "de Bourget". Since he lost all his property because of his flight, he became a wine grower and the children who remained with him married one after the other. My father's family traces its descent from one of these children and held their title of nobility until the French Revolution. In the village of Tunsel in Baden there exist inheritance records for the years 1703 to 1810 for members of the Bourget family. At the present time the mayor is having a search made in the Provincial Archives in Karlsruhe for the first names of the testators and deceased members of the family Bourget.

My grandfather was born in Tunsel in 1821; his father was Philip-Adolf who was born in 1789. There are also estate records in existence there, because some members of the family died childless. At the time of the French Revolution there resided in Thann in Alsace a brother of Philipp who is also supposed to have had in his possession some family papers which were lost, however, in the confusion of that period. A son of the old "de Bourget" was named Cornelius and this name as well as the names Philipp, Adolf, Franz-Anton, Louis, Jaques have remained in the family. An official of the mayor's office in Thann told me that many old records were burned during the bombardment of 1944.

Last year I saw at a genealogist's in an old book of the nobility a picture of our coat of arms with a description which coincides exactly with that which I have given above concerning the family. In the Provincial Archives apparently all the records are not available since some disappeared during their transfer during World War II.

In my opinion, Mr. Burgett, you are descended from the same ancestors as my father's family. One branch of the family lives in upper Alsace in the neighborhood of Volkensburg, although male descendants allegedly no longer exist. In Switzerland, also, descendants are still living who trace their descent from the above mentioned Francois-Antoine de Bourget. In Baden there are also a few families with the name Burget who also go back to the old Francois-Antoine.

BOURGET

No proof can be furnished that the Burgetts in America descend from a Francois-Antoine BOURGET, French Huguenot refugee in Germany. This theory is based on a private opinion only which cannot be considered, since proof must be established by facts.

The beginning itself is already suspect in mentioning that Francois-Antoine Bourget, fearing the anti-Huguenot persecution, took refuge with his children in Alsace-Lorraine in 1669.

At this point it is worth to recall that in 1669 the protestant religion was still legally tolerated until the revocation by the Edict of Nantes in 1685. On the other part, there never was a province Alsace-Lorraine; this name was attributed to the "Imperial Land" consisting of Lorraine and Alsace, annexed by Germany after the victory of 1871. But in 1669 and during the entire period of persecution against the protestants after 1685, Lorraine was subject to the same laws as France and could, therefore, hardly provide a shelter for French refugees. Alsace which was reunited with France, except Strasbourg, by the Westphalian Treaty of 1648 was completely ruined and destroyed by the Thirty Years' War. Strasbourg was not reunited with France until 1681; the conditions contained in the capitulation of this city guaranteed protestant parishes the exercise of their religion but prohibited them from granting asylum to French protestant refugees.

This, of course, does not constitute a claim that French protestant families of the name Bourget have not emigrated, especially with destination Germany. Quite to the contrary, this is supported by the publication by R. Beringuier: Die Colonieliste von 1699, general role played by French refugees in Brandenburg since 1699 (Berlin, 1888). We cite two findings:

Page 34. Role of French refugees in Neustadt. Jean Bourget, of Rouen, maker of stockings.

Page 65. Role of French refugees in Friederichstadt. Guillaume Bourguet, gardener, his wife and three children.

But may we step back and take up the matter at the outset. In admitting that BURGETT is an original French name (which is possible), its original form would have to be BOURGET or BOURGUET.

This name, without being too frequent, is however not rare in France. It derives from the word "bourg", - a bourget or bourguet therefore is a small bourg. In topography there is the Lac du Bourget (Savoy) and the airport of Bourget near Paris. The most outstanding personalities of the name are Paul Bourget, contemporary writer and member of the Academie Francaise, author of the "Pupil", and Louis Bourguet, Huguenot sage, born at Nimes and fled to Switzerland after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

The French emigration under the "Ancient Regime", that is prior to the revolution of 1789, to countries other than French possessions (Canada, Louisiana, etc.) has always had its cause in the religious question. This leads us to admit that the Bourget or Bourguet emigrants were protestants.

In the absence of details (name of the first emigrant and his place of origin), general information has been collected.

BOURGET. There was a noble family of this name in the Normandy, displaying as coat-of-arms: Azue with a gold stripe accompanied by 3 silver dots. We do not know whether the following are related: David Bourget, minister at Frene (Normandy) 1620-26 - Daniel Bourget, scientist at Saumur, 1647 - Jehan Bourget, professor at the college of Queville, church of Rouen, imprisoned by the Court of Tournelle on April 7, 1672, being accused of having induced several Catholics to change their religion. His brother, Salamon Bourget, was dean of said college since 1657. They were sons of Salomon Bourget, burgher of Caen, and Suzanne Louvet. Daniel and Salomon Bourget were condemned to the galleys for the rest of their lives for having assisted a religious assembly, the election of Argentan, 1697. A widow Bourget, pensioner of the Netherlands at The Hague, 1763.

BOURGUET (Louis) philosopher, archeologist, naturalist and mathematician, born April 23, 1678, at Nimes; died December 31, 1742, at Neuchatel, Switzerland.

Bourguet was not more than 7 years old when the revocation of the Edict of Nantes forced his family to emigrate. His father, a wealthy merchant in Nimes, moved afterward to Geneva with his wife Catherine Rey and their son; but since 1687, after a short stay in Lausanne, he settled in Zurich where he, with his associates Jacques Bourguet and Jean Rey, established a big factory producing silk stockings, muslin and other luxury materials. The ensuing success made him decide in 1689 to establish a second factory at Castasegna. There he delegated his son whom he had made to follow in his job and who had resigned from college despite his rapid progress thanks to his astounding memory. But Louis Bourguet felt little inclination toward commerce; an irrestible urge turned him back to the scienoes. In 1690 he returned to Zurich and his uncle Rey passing away 2 years later, he reassumed with passion the studies which he was forced to interupt. After a side trip of 4 years to Venice, 1711-1715, he returned to Berne where his family lived since 1700.

Bourguet had married in 1702 at Neuchatel, Switzerland, Suzanne Jourdan, daughter of Claude Jourdan, of Marvejols, having taken refuge in this town. He became a widower in 1738 with 4 children of whom onedaughter only survived him.

Nothing is known if a Bourguet who lived 1719 in Berlin and was employed as a councellor to the French High Court, was related to this family.

In the bulletin of the French Society of the History of Protestantism there are numerous places where the names Bourget or Bourguet are mentioned. As this research has not been accorded much proliferation, a few details are enumerated.
